I would like to say special thanks to all of those who promoted my project in any - even the simplest - way. I am greatly indebted to Dr. Varga István, who – as the rector of the Theological College of Veszprém – covered the full printing cost of this publication. I am also grateful to all people – including our college staff, friends and family members – who have helped me with the preparation of this first edition. I owe a debt of gratitude to Fr. Bernát (the current superior of the Abbey of Zirc) and Fr. Peter (the abbot of the Abbey of Dallas), since it was due to their help that I got into contact with Dr. Tom Pruit, who was my native-reader and editor throughout this project, and I am grateful to God that He guided us towards this common goal. For this task, Dr. Pruit was especially suitable for a couple of reasons. Firstly, because his experience both as an English teacher of both literature and grammar and as a writer, proved invaluable both in my phrasing and diction. Secondly, in addition to his degrees in English, he also has a degree in theology. Thus, as a native reader his professional skills were of great help, and as a Catholic believer, his editorial suggestions gave testimony to his love of God and the Church.
